A force of 1,200 guerrillas, divided into two groups, left Huanling on the night of 7 October 1950 to attack the railroad stations at Huayang and Luchiasan (113-58, 31-10), north of Hankow. Each of these stations was guarded by a battalion of the 4 Field Army and some local troops. After an hour of fighting in which ten Communists were killed, the troops fled and the guerrillas burned the station buildings and captured some arms and supplies.
